The power of speech is described in depth in several ways. Behavioural specialists have conducted experiments and determined that certain words reflect the behavioural characteristics of the person who spoke or wrote them. The power of speech is explained in different shapes and forms, in fact, it has even been discussed at length in Chassidic philosophy— speech is a rather extensive concept with all philosophical beliefs, psychology, and even in physics.

With the power of speech comes the birth of linguistics. Each language is complex and versatile and there are 7,106 living languages in the world, there are languages dating back more than 2,000 years ago such as one of the oldest languages recorded, Tamil. Tamil is a Dravidian language spoken in southern India, Sri Lanka and Singapore. Linguistics is a form of dynamism all over the world and has been around for centuries, linguistics is used in complex forms, from cave paintings to physical speech. As humans, we were given the power of speech specifically when created. We have two options, we can use it for the better or for the worse.

When people ask me about my writing and what inaugurated me, it's a dense answer for various reasons. Perhaps it's because there isn't just one reason. I used to be hesitant to use my words and put them out there for the public to read and understand. I was afraid of the backlash, or the ridicules that may transpire, but what I realised was by fretting about others judgments, I was silencing myself; I wasn't utilizing my power of speech.

I don't write for the validation of others; I write to keep my voice. Writing presented me a platform to exercise my voice for the better good. When speaking physically doesn't get the word across, the messages spread through my fingers does.

Too many times I discover the sayings, "kids should be seen and not heard," or "you're too young to speak your mind." or "Your opinion doesn't count/matter."

It's all wrong.

You're not just a child who should be seen and not heard, you're not just a melodramatic person, you're not just a girl or a boy, you're not just someone who shouldn't be understood. You're someone with validated opinions, feelings, and emotions. Don't let the belittlement of the world keep you from establishing yourself out into the world, your words matter, your opinions matter and most importantly, you matter.

The power of speech comes from a place buried down inside us, it is like the awakening of the soul; our words come from a place inside us that can no longer keep the words contained and need to be exposed. Our expressions are a power of our mind, they are an endless composition to be attested that everything is a wave, and our thoughts drive waves into particles of matter. Quantum physics confirms that our consciousness is what creates our reality. Essentially, this insinuates that what we embed out into the universe is what we get back, and this can relate back to the practice of linguistics and the power of our words— words and thoughts that we emit out into the universe are the equivalent words and thoughts that will come back around to us.

A powerful quote states:

“Thoughts don’t become things; thoughts ARE things.” — Eric Michael Leventhal.

Don’t enable your voice to get misplaced amongst the crowd of those who may appear blatant and more superior. Don’t permit yourself to fade and form into the sculpture of what others desire to understand and observe. You’re more than just another person in the crowd, you’re a wrecking force that deserves to have a voice that is valued— even quantum physics proves that your thoughts are scientifically proven as beneficial ‘things’ — Quantum-physics proves the string theory that identifies everything breaking down into energies, thus, proving the law of attraction theory.

Your thoughts matter, (pun intended), literally and scientifically. If every person was withdrawn and didn't practice their voice to speak their minds, there'd be a world overflowing of silenced energy and mindless characters filled of waves. What a strange world that would be. Our voices, opinions (whether right or wrong) is what keeps the world stimulating, it keeps us thinking and urges us to continue to be open-minded and educated. Do you know how many supplementary things we learn from listening to what others have to say? A lot.

Here is my challenge to you, as much as you apply your voice to speak up for what you believe in, also make sure to listen to the voices of those who may not be as loud or as steady. Give someone a step up with their voice, not a step-down.

We are all waves of energy, the string theory presents this. There are two options, you can use your thoughts, words, energies, and everything for the better good of the world or in a negative way, but remember, the law of attraction presents to you that what you put out is what you get in return. Speak your mind, radiate positive energy, speak into existence, do whatever it is to exert yourself, just make sure to exercise your concepts and thoughts for the greater.

“Words are singularly the most powerful force available to humanity. We can choose to use this force constructively with words of encouragement, or destructively using words of despair. Words have energy and power with the ability to help, to heal, to hinder, to hurt, to harm, to humiliate and to humble.” — Yehuda Berg.
